Series win chances from a rating built on quarterfinal play (2–3 games per team, each against a single opponent). Fearless draft adds variance the model can’t see, so treat them as leans, not locks. See "How the prediction works".

DRAFT LEAGUE FALL 2026 · SEMIFINALS PREVIEW

HOW THE PREDICTION WORKS

1 Score every player, every game

The same 0–100 MVP score used on the series boards: role-weighted, ranked against the other nine players.

2 How much did each team outplay its opponent?

The team's average player score minus its opponent's, across all its quarterfinal games.

3 Adjust for who they played

Add how much stronger or weaker that opponent was than the average quarterfinal loser (51.5). Beating a better team counts for more.

4 Turn the gap into a win chance

Every 10 points of rating gap ≈ 73% per game (a logistic curve), then combined into best-of-five odds. A longer series rewards the better team, which is why the odds are a bit wider than a Bo3 would give.

TEAM	OUTPLAYED BY	SCHEDULE	RATING
DBAS	+16.6	−1.0	15.6
TTC	+17.6	−2.2	15.4
INTS	+11.1	+1.2	12.3
LF	+9.5	+2.0	11.5

Limits: each team played only one quarterfinal opponent, over 2–3 games. The model can't see drafts, and Fearless means games 3–5 will be played on champions these teams never showed in the quarterfinals. Read the favorites' odds as a ceiling. DBAS (15.6) and TTC (15.4) rate almost even, so a DBAS–TTC final would be close to a coin flip.

TTC vs INTS

KEYS AND PREDICTION

TTC WINS IF...

They get ahead early again: TTC led at 15 in both quarterfinal games and were never more than 499 gold behind.

They close before soul: TTC's games averaged 29.6 minutes, while INTS's went 36:54 and 45:17.

Lord Beach and Vermened win their lanes. Top and bot are TTC's biggest edges.

INTS WINS IF...

They survive to the late game: INTS took Dragon Soul in both games, both times while behind.

They keep the deficit manageable. They won from 4,683 down, but TTC finished its games +9,355 on average.

Ayarelayen and The Anbu Leader win mid and support, INTS's two edges.

Ornn is the first problem to solve

VorrijaardBorn played Ornn in 13 of his last 20 ranked games and won 9. Under Fearless he gets it once. Ban it or let him have it early; either way, the top lane after that is open.

Bot side runs dry first

Vermened and Fáfnir share Jinx, Xayah, Ashe and Tristana, and Ether and The Anbu Leader share five supports. Those roles lose their comfort picks fastest.

Two players outside their ranked role

Wormlock (mid) and Fáfnir (ADC) both play mostly another role in ranked, so their pools are the thinnest by games 4–5. Ether and TheFinalOakTree have the most room to adapt.

LF vs DBAS

KEYS AND PREDICTION

LF WINS IF...

They stop the top-lane snowball: spiritbr8ker averaged a 2,508-gold lead over his opponent at 15.

Surav carries: +1,246 gold at 15 and 32% of LF's damage, including a 14-kill game against SLIP.

They turn first blood into control. LF drew first blood in all three games but took first tower only once.

DBAS WINS IF...

They do what they did to DRG: first tower and first Baron in both games, +2,629 at 15.

spiritbr8ker gets ahead early; he was the quarterfinals' second-best player (81.6).

Double B and Pat1o survive lane against Surav and Tidilywink, the matchup DBAS rate behind in.

SERIES ODDS

MODEL PICK: DBAS 3–1

Fearless: Pat1o has played Neeko in 17 of his last 18 ranked support games, and he gets it once. Tidilywink has played 12 different supports.

Pat1o gets one Neeko

He's played Neeko in 17 of his last 18 ranked support games. Fearless lets him play it once. After that, DBAS's support is on unfamiliar ground against Tidilywink's 12-champion pool.

Mid and bot will collide

TheDarkSovereign and Ystarial share eight mid laners, and Surav and Double B share six ADCs. Whoever takes those first denies them for the rest of the series.

The top gap gets wider, not narrower spiritbr8ker has Rumble (6–1) and Gnar on top of his quarterfinal picks. Shia Labouef played top in only 5 of his last 20 ranked games. Fearless tests depth, and that's DBAS's edge.
